

Router Manufacturer Support

The table located below lists information of the different router manufacturers. This will help troubleshooting your personal router. Provided is a phone number and a link to their support page.

To improve your home network, Allied Telesis recommends you enable your router to automatically obtain an IP address on the WAN side (DHCP) and set up a private network on the internal side. You want to make sure you also activate your firewall.

Since all routers and gateways are different, the steps required to secure your network will vary. Below are some links to common manufacturer's support pages where you can learn how to configure and secure your router or gateway. If the manufacturer of your router or gateway is not listed, refer to the user's guide of your router or gateway or contact the manufacturer directly.

Note: The following table provides vendor resources. As this information could change, refer to your manufacturer user guide for the most accurate information.
